

The Barrys – the other Victorian architectural dynasty

Monday 14 March, 6.45 – 9.00pm, Dulwich College

Dan Cruickshank explores the world of the Barry and Scott architectural dynasties in the 150th anniversary year of Charles Barry Jnr's 'New College' at Dulwich.

The New Dulwich College was built on its 70 acre site on Dulwich Common in the 1860s. The main building was designed by Charles Barry Jnr, the eldest son of the architect of the Houses of Parliament, Sir Charles Barry, in a style which he called 'Northern Italian of the Thirteenth Century'.

Sir George Gilbert Scott was a prolific Victorian Gothic architect, and founder of a fantastically successful architectural dynasty. He has been called the 'unsung hero of British architecture' and his style touched every aspect of British life, although it was not always admired.

Dan Cruickshank will explore the two great Victorian dynastic architectural families in this lecture. The emphasis will be on Charles Barry Jnr who designed the room in which the lecture will be delivered.

Writer, art historian, architectural consultant and broadcaster, Dan Cruickshank has made numerous history and culture programmes for the BBC.

Charles Barry Jnr.

Dan Cruickshank

Tickets £10, available from lectureseries@dulwich.org.uk

6.45 – 7.15pm: Drinks reception in Lower Hall

7.30 – 8.30pm: Lecture in the Great Hall

Drinks will be served in the Lower Hall before and after the lecture and visitors can also view an exhibition in the Wodehouse Library on The Barrys and Dulwich, which includes a selection of podcasts delivered by various members of the College staff on the architecture of the College.

DULWICH COLLEGE
FOUNDED 1619

